Summer Breeze Jacquie D'Alessandro

A new start in a new place is exactly what widow Elise Stanford needs for herself and her two young children. When she returns to the small town on the east end of Long Island where she spent many happy childhood summers, she's expecting a quiet, peaceful existence. Instead her life is turned upside down when she hires Seth McGuire to renovate her house. Seth is ten years younger than Elise, and potently sexy. She wanted peace and quiet. An affair with a younger man is exactly what she doesn't need—or is it?

Summer Breeze was originally published in 2006 as part of a summer-themed anthology entitled Come September. It has been out of print for years, so I'm delighted to be able to now re-publish this story.

Marrying younger men runs in my family: my mom is two years older than my dad, my sister is ten months older than her husband, and I'm 11 months older than my husband. None of these are big gaps, but my writer's imagination always wondered, what if the gap was bigger? Like a decade? That question was the catalyst for Summer Breeze.

I hope you enjoy my "older woman/younger man" story. And may your life always be filled with love, romance, good health, and happily-ever-afters.
