Phillips Academy was founded as an all-boys school in 1778 by Samuel Phillips, Jr., a member of the revolutionary war family, the Phillipses. The great seal of the school was designed by Paul Revere. George Washington spoke at the school in its first year & was so impressed that he recommended that his nephews go there, which they did. John Hancock, the famous signer of the United States Declaration of Independence, signed the school's articles of incorporation. Phillips Academy's traditional opponent is Phillips Exeter Academy, established three years later in Exeter, New Hampshire by Samuel Phillips' uncle, Dr. John Phillips. There is a rivalry between the two schools. The football teams have met nearly every year since 1878, making it one of the oldest high school rivalries in the country. For 100 years, Phillips Academy shared its campus with Andover Theological Seminary, was founded on Phillips Hill in 1807 by orthodox Calvinists who had fled Harvard College after it appointed a liberal Unitarian theologian to a professorship of divinity. The Andover Theological Seminary was independent from Phillips Academy but shared the same board of directors. In 1908, the seminary departed Phillips Academy, leaving behind its key buildings: academic building Pearson Hall (formerly a chapel), and dormitories Foxcroft Hall and Bartlet Hall. These buildings became the heart of the Andover campus, & was expanded in the 1920s & 30s around this historic core with new buildings of similar Georgian style: Samuel Phillips Hall, George Washington Hall, Samuel Morse Hall, Paul Revere Hall, Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, Commons, the Addison Gallery of American Art & Cochran Chapel. Along with this new construction, at least nine existing buildings were moved to make way for the Vista & the Great Lawn & the creation of a formal West Quad. Small portions of Andover's campus were laid out by Frederick Law Olmsted, designer of Central Park & himself a graduate of the school
